SECTION I. THE ASSESSMENT OF COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCES. (30 points)

Read the text and do the tasks below.

Universal Body Language

Body language is something we all use every day of our lives. Sometimes, we use it without even knowing that we do it. Body language helps us understand how other people feel and think. But is body language the same in all parts of the world?

We all know that when people are happy, they smile. Their eyes widen and they seem to ‘open up.’ When someone is sad, the opposite is true. A person looks miserable and starts to feel less happy and energetic. But did you know that there are actually seven universal body language signals? It’s true. All across the planet, in every culture, the way people express happiness, sadness, boredom, fear, anger, surprise, and disgust are the same.

Boredom is easily identified. When people feel bored they may yawn, tap their fingers, or move their legs a lot. You can also see when someone is bored when they look at other people or things and not at the person to whom they are speaking.

When people show fear, they often look nervous and put their hands over their faces not to see the object that makes them be afraid. A red face and intense eyes show that a person is feeling anger.

Surprise and disgust are quite similar. The mouth and eyes will become wide open. However, when a person strongly dislikes the situation or somebody’s behaviour, they move away from the object that causes the emotion.

Understanding body language can help you understand other people even if you do not speak their language. Experts say that about 70 percent of all communication is done without words. So even if you do not speak another person’s language, their body language may already tell you a lot of what you need to know. Still, experts wonder if understanding the seven universal body language signals can replace a foreign language.
